NOTES:

Safety & Security: The military established the current, unelected interim government. The interim government has ruled by decree since it abrogated the constitution in reaction to an April 10, 2009, high court ruling that declared the interim government illegal. Under Public Emergency Regulations promulgated at the time of the abrogation of Fiji's constitution, some basic rights have been limited, including freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. These regulations were scheduled to be lifted in January 2010 but are being extended on a month-to-month basis, with no clear indication as to when they will be lifted. The independence of Fiji's law enforcement and judicial systems is compromised, putting into question protections ordinarily afforded by the rule of law. The Department of State continues to warn U.S. citizens to consider carefully the risks of travel to Fiji at this time

Health: Vaccination against typhoid and polio is advised, Hepatitis A occurs. Hepatitis B is endemic. Fiji may impose HIV/AIDS travel restrictions on some visa applicants for work permits. Applicants must obtain a medical clearance, and the work permit committee will make the decision to grant the permit on a case-by-case basis. Inquire directly with the Embassy of the Republic of Fiji, or the Fiji Mission to the United Nations in New York. Fiji has developed standby procedures to screen for possible cases of H1N1 influenza. The Ministry of Health is monitoring the incidence of H1N1 cases in the country.

Fumigation of Wood Packing Materials: Fiji is in the final phase of implementing ISPM15 requirements for wood packaging material (WPM).
